The thesis of my philosophising is: The My Philosophy cannot become human by. That the Deity alone is truly reality does not preclude that this reality is accessible to us only in the world; as it were, as an image in the mirror of man, because something of the Deity must be in him for him to be able to respond to the My Philosophy. Nietzsche gained importance for me only late as the magnificent revelation of nihilism and the task of overcoming it in my youth I had avoided him, repelled by the extremes, the rapture, and the diversity.

The basic questions were formulated by Kant with, I felt, moving simplicity: Hegel is a consummation of two and a half millennia of thought. It saddens me to think of so much food that is thrown away everyday.

In the Deity alone there is reality, truth, and the immutability of being. Still the consciousness of loneliness grew upon me in my youth, yet nothing seemed more pernicious to me than loneliness, especially the loneliness in the midst of social intercourse that deceives itself in a multitude My Philosophy friendships.
