See Jacobsen et al. For example, unionization rates of Turkish immigrants were found to be lower in the Netherlands than in Germany and Sweden, reflecting overall unionization rates in those countries. TradeUnionpowerandintegrationinGermany. The field of action for trade unions is guaranteed by the autonomy of free collective bargaining, but it also limits the scope of trade union policy with regards to conflicts about payment and working conditions. In this regard, developments in the social field in the EU breed expectations about the capacity of trade unions to extend their influence in tripartite negotiations and effectively shape employment relations in Europe.
