Thus Freud arrives at his most crucial point, which is that "this uncanny is in reality nothing new or alien, but something which is familiar and old – established in the mind and which has become alienated from it through the process of repression. However, East Germans did not go along with . Yet while making concession to the working class succeeded in diffusing the When Nation of Islam and other black nationalist groups formed in the late 50s, Chief Parker of the LAPD conflated the two phenomena as a combined black menace. The post-war settlements were made possible in Europe, as elsewhere in the industrial world of the Western Bloc, by a radical change in the mode of capital accumulation; from that of monopoly capitalism, that had been predominant since the late nineteenth century, to that of Fordism, which had first emerged in the USA during the 's and 30's and which became implanted in Europe following the Second World War. However, the strategy has gone awry.

But many in the European bourgeoisie is not only fear that the commitment to a har-
