But it turned its head away, indifferent, and that broke my heart. Melville The men she is close to have their own sexual hangups: Horsfield is put off, sexually, first because Julia cries in the cinema and secondly because she takes off her hat without looking in the mirror and rearranging her hair, which would have signified her desire to please .

Thisjuxtapositionofhumourandpainischaracteristicofthenovel.Evenir could see how many flashbacks to Dominica – imperceptible to the unacquainted reader – occurred in it. She was skeptical about the ability of the outsider to ever belong in another culture, and more particularly a Creole woman trying to cope with the sexism, racism and class divisions of early twentieth-century Britain.
